Introduction

Purpose of the Directory

This directory contains basic contact and service-provision information about non-profit, faith-based organizations (hereafter FBOs)\(^1\) that serve the Latino population in US cities in the Eastern, Southeastern, Western, and Midwestern regions of the country. It supplies information on the organizational and leadership characteristics of these organizations as well as data on the types, level, and distribution of particular services in each metro area.

By presenting data on service utilization, the directory also highlights the needs of the Latino communities in each city and region. As such, it serves as a resource for those who avail themselves of the services offered by the FBOs as well as for policymakers, public administrators, philanthropic organizations, and researchers who are seeking to better understand, support, and improve interactions and partnerships between FBOs and the Latino community. For the FBOs themselves, the directory is also a source of information for networking among organizations doing similar work. It also provides a way by which to assess the strengths and weaknesses of service availability and organizations in certain regions, as well as suggesting areas where further financial, political, educational or training support in organizational structures will be beneficial.

\(^1\) Only 56 (or 19 percent) of the 295 organizations represented within do not self-identify as faith-based. Although their missions are often informed by their faith, these organizations view themselves as community-based, rather than faith-based, nondenominational organizations. However, the directory will refer to the collective organizations within as FBOs, given that the majority (81 percent) identify as such.
DATA COLLECTION AND CRITERIA FOR INCLUSION

The regions represented in the directory were chosen on the basis of their having large representative Latino populations. The majority of the 45 cities included therein have been identified as having the fastest-growing Latino populations in the country. In selecting the organizations for inclusion, researchers sought organizations that work with a Latino clientele and that were either Latino-owned or located in a predominantly Latino neighborhood. Initial selection of the individual organizations from each region was conducted using organizations previously known to the Center for the Study of Latino Religion through its Networks of Faith initiative. Additional organizations were identified using the snowball method: First a master list of 143 participating Latino-serving organizations was obtained from Nueva Esperanza’s Hispanic Capacity Project (HCP) located in geographic areas with large Latino populations. The HCP organizations were then contacted in order to obtain their most recent information and to get leads on other similar organizations known to them. The Center also conducted Internet searches to identify more organizations in the target regions and to gather further information on which of these organizations already had operational websites. We subsequently used the same snowball method noted above with the organizations located via the Internet in order to expand the network of FBOs included here. We do not claim that the organizations included in this directory are exhaustive or representative of all possible Latino-serving FBOs. Rather, we limited our search to organizations that were located through established networks or had an active Internet presence and thus priority for inclusion was given to organizations that had updated and functional websites, and to those that had been directly contacted by the Center and were able to provide updated contact and service information.
Organization of the Directory

The directory is divided into four sections by geographic region: East, Southeast, Midwest, and West. Each regional section is subdivided by state and city and listed in alphabetical order. The regions and the 45 selected cities are listed below in Table 1.

The FBOs in each city are listed in alphabetical order as separate entries that include the organization’s name and contact information. Each entry contains a brief listing of the organization’s self-defined identity, organizational characteristics (i.e. an operating budget, board of directors, etc.), services provided, and human resources.
Categories of Services

Table 2 lists the broad categories of service provision offered by the FBOs in this directory and where applicable, some of the widely offered services within each category.

Given the extensive list of service categories and specific program found among our directory’s entries, it is not surprising that no one area is offered by more than a fifth of the total. As Table 3 shows, the most commonly offered service areas are Child, Youth, and Family Services and Programs (20 percent offer these); Basic Provision Services (i.e., food, shelter, clothing distribution; 18 percent); Educational Services (15 percent); Training and Placement Services (13 percent); and Medical Care/Health Services (10 percent).

Regionally, the same five service categories that top Table 3 — children, youth and family programs; basic provision services; educational services; training and placement; and medical/health services consistently appear among the most offered programs in each geographical region, though they rank in a different order among all the regions (see Table 4). In the East alone, counseling services are second most highly offered service category, whereas in all of the other three regions counseling is not among the top five services offered.

Organizational Characteristics

As noted above, the considerable majority of organizations included in this directory explicitly self-identify as faith-based (81 percent). This identification is most highly found among organizations in the Midwest (88 percent), while the Southeast has the lowest percentage of organizations of any region describing themselves as faith-based (72 percent; see Table 5). There is a much larger difference regionally in the percentage of organizations serving a majority Latino community, as Table 5 illustrates. Whereas 81 percent of directory entries in the Eastern region do so, only a third (34 percent) of organizations in the West serve majority Latino communities. No region boasts a majority of organizations that are Latino-run, with the highest rate (31 percent) being found in the Midwest and the lowest (11 percent) in the West (Table 5).

The organizations included in our directory also vary along regional lines in some aspects of their internal infrastructures. As Table 6 shows, the West contains a much larger share of Latino-serving FBOs that have boards of directors (73 percent) than found among the other three regions but a considerably smaller percentage of groups with a 501(c)3 status (only 13 percent reported having this).

CONCLUSIONS & RECOMMENDATIONS

As noted above, across all four of the regions included in this directory Latino-serving FBOs consistently offer services in the categories of: Basic Provision Services, Child, Youth, and Family Services, Medical Care/Health Services, Educational Services, and Training and Placement. This indicates that the organizations listed herein are spending a large percentage of their resources on providing basic needs for their communities rather than putting their energies into advocacy or social change. This suggests that the Latino communities they serve need more economic and educational development and opportunity in order to make them less dependent on the FBOs for basic services. Another implication is that the FBOs need more outside support to enable them to deliver more than basic services, such as advocacy and community development, which would in turn strengthen the social capital within these communities and possibly lessen the need for such basic care. The churches and FBOs involved in these areas may have a demand for these services as well as a willingness to provide them, but may lack the time, training, and capacity to provide them.

Surveying the services provided most often by the organizations, it is noteworthy that, despite the widespread perception that immigration is a major issue for the Latino community in the United States, only 11 percent of the FBOs represented here provide services specifically for immigrants or refugees. Thirty-five of the organizations with immigration and refugee services are in Illinois, Florida, New York, Pennsylvania, and California. Interestingly, there are none in the sampled organizations in Texas, and only one in Arizona. This could reflect the reality that there are many Latino communities, especially in the southwest, that have been resident in the US for multiple generations. It is also likely that immigrants are among those receiving basic provisions, education and job training services.

In terms of organizational characteristics, the one result that stands out is the low number of Latino-serving FBOs that report having a 501(c)(3) status, the legal designation that allows an organization to apply for federal grant money and to take in exponentially more donations, since they become deductible for the donor. The lack of this status limits the growth potential of the nonprofit FBO. This finding could point to a lack of knowledge by those who are operating the FBO that they can acquire this designation and that it can help their organization financially. Therefore there may be a need for further education and capacity building among the organizations here represented as to what they can do to increase their funding and stability. Another possibility is that these organizations already know that the characteristics that would make them more successful, but they do not have the time, resources, or network of contacts to attain them.
Overall, the Latino-serving organizations represented here are providing vital services that have an impact on their client community. Expanding the sphere of the FBOs’ influence into other services, or better equipping them to carry out the work they are currently doing, will require joint efforts from the client community, the political and philanthropic communities, and the faith communities who interact with them. The directory represents a contribution to this process.
